Human Anatomy and Physiology 2010 excerpt from the journal of anatomy and physiology vol 8 i think an argument for my view may be drawn from the possibility of the occurrence of a monocrotic pulse according to the common theory of the dicrotic wave this would imply that the aortic valves never close at all in which case we can hardly suppose that the circulation could continue but upon the other view it only means that the rate of the pulse is equal to the rate of oscillation in the aorta the dicrotic wave seen in a tracing may thus be made up of three waves super posed the recoil from the aortic valves the first oscillatory wave of the large arteries and the second or sometimes the first oscillatory wave of the sphygmograph about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition we do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
