eleanor butler s family wanted her enter a convent sarah ponsonby was fending off the unwanted attentions of her guardian all that both women wanted was to live together and devote their lives to each other and in 1778 they ran away from their aristocratic homes in ireland to settle in llangollen wales to devote themselves to delicious seclusion and romantic friendship their chosen path was not an easy one their families disowned them and accustomed to a comfortable life they were soon in debt this did not stop them transforming plas newydd the little cottage they chose into the gothic residence of their dreams complete with well stocked library and extensive gardens while dabbling in genteel farming and carrying out a rigorous programme of correspondence and self improvement their determination to live private lives away from the glare of society was compromised by their growing celebrity and prominent members of the intelligentsia and the literary and political circles of the day found their way to plas newydd to enjoy their company and wit and to admire their achievements the ladies lived into devoted old age caring for each other to the last and became a local legend elizabeth mavor brings these two characters vividly to life eleanor with her forceful personality french education and crippling migraines and sarah much younger and more retiring but quietly assertive as well as caring this well researched and beautifully written account examines the nature of their intimate relationship the relevance or otherwise of the term lesbian and the notion of romantic friendship in the eighteenth century and later she takes an often humorous look at their tempestuous relations with family friends servants neighbours and the polite society that they rejected in favour of the very special world they created for themselves in a social and cultural study of nineteenth century bourgeois women in northern france bonnie smith shows how the advent of industrialization removed women from the productive activity of the middle class and confined them to a largely reproductive experience out of this she suggests they created their own world centered on domesticity family and religion to understand these women the author argues it is necessary to examine their world on its own terms as a coherent whole professor smith draws on demographic psychoanalytic anthropological linguistic as well as historical insights and uses a variety of evidence that includes personal interviews photographs letters genealogical records and traditional archival sources part one outlines the transition from mercantile to industrial manufacturing that terminated the relationship between home and business and that separated the sexes according to their respective functions part two concentrates on the lives of the women following their acceptance of an exclusively reproductive function and shows how the interdependence and fusion of household chores religious values and social conscience fostered a unified cultural system part three then explores the propagation of this domesticity by the convent as the primary educational system and by the sentimental novel as the vehicle most suited for an ideological expression of domestic life
