by the time of lucian popular religion had ceased to hold much influence over the hearts of the cultured classes philosophy was the new god but there were efforts in some circles to divert men s minds from the philosophical sects and restore a sort of unorthodox faith in the old religion against this artificial revival of mythological faith lucian pitted the influence of his tremendous satirical powers in the dialogues of the gods he pulls the curtain aside exposing the gods as they engage in private disputes domestic brawls and love affairs with their jealousies and scandals their paltry strifes and petty motives the lesson is simple can one worship beings with such weaknesses such foibles and such scandalous and immoral lives this new translation by baudelaire jones breathes fresh life into ancient deities such as zeus hera hermes aphrodite poseidon and athena revealing complex contradictory sex obsessed creatures that modern mortals can surely relate to before time was and while yet the world was uncreated chaos reigned the earth and the waters the light and the darkness the stars and the firmament were intermingled in a vapoury liquid all things were formless and confused no creature existed phantom shapes moved as clouds on the ruffled surface of a sea it was the birth time of the gods the first deity sprang from an immense bulrush bud which rose spear like in the midst of the boundless disorder other gods were born but three generations passed before the actual separation of the atmosphere from the more solid earth finally where the tip of the bulrush points upward the heavenly spirits appeared from this time their kingdom was divided from the lower world where chaos still prevailed to the fourth pair of gods it was given to create the earth these two beings were the powerful god of the air izanagi and the fair goddess of the clouds izanami from them sprang all life now izanagi and izanami wandered on the floating bridge of heaven this bridge spanned the gulf between heaven and the unformed world it was upheld in the air and it stood secure the god of the air spoke to the goddess of the clouds Òthere must needs be a kingdom beneath us let us visit it Ó when he had so said he plunged his jewelled spear into the seething mass below the drops that fell from the point of the spear congealed and became the island of onogoro thereupon the earth makers descended and called up a high mountain peak on whose summit could rest one end of the heavenly bridge and around which the whole world should revolve
