the central theme of this book is national land and infrastructure design in the age of the declining population and the recovery from the great east japan earthquake in the affected regions in japan based on the theory of spatial economics and evidence from japanese history the authors show that the growing economy with a population increase develops into a multi cored and complex structure in the population decline phase however such construction will be destabilized because of agglomeration economies in the central core then a catastrophic shock that strikes may provoke the decline of the lower rank size provincial cities and their eventual disappearance if they compete only in lower prices of staple products not only is the practice bad for the residents it also leads to lower national welfare resulting from the loss of diversity and overcrowded big cities the authors argue that small local towns can recover and will be sustained if they will endeavor in innovative production by making good use of local natural resources and social capital under the ongoing declining population in japan an undesirable concentration in tokyo will proceed further with increasing social cost and risk the recent novel coronavirus pandemic has highlighted that concern when discussing inequality and poverty in hong kong scholars and politicians often focus on the failures of government policy and push for an increase in social welfare richard wong argues in fixing inequality in hong kong that universal retirement support minimum wage and standard hours of work are of limited effect in shrinking the inequality gap by comparing hong kong with singapore he points out that hong kong needs a new and long term strategy on human resource policy he recommends more investment in education focusing on early education and immigration policy reforms to attract highly educated and skilled people to join the workforce in analyzing what causes inequality this book ties disparate issues together into a coherent framework such as hong kong s aging population lack of investment in human capital and family breakdowns rising divorce rates among low income households have worsened the housing shortage driving rents and property prices upwards housing problems have created a bigger gap between those who own housing and have the ability to invest in their children s human capital and those who cannot thus adversely impacting intergenerational upward mobility this is the third of richard wong s collections of articles on society and economy in hong kong diversity and occasional anarchy and hong kong land for hong kong people published by hong kong university press in 2013 and 2015 respectively discuss growing economic and social contradictions in hong kong and current housing problems and their solutions is there a tradeoff between raising growth and reducing inequality and poverty this paper reviews the theoretical and empirical literature on the complex links between growth inequality and poverty with causation going in both directions the evidence suggests that growth can be effective in reducing poverty but its impact on inequality is ambiguous and depends on the underlying sources of growth the impact of poverty and inequality on growth is likewise ambiguous as several channels mediate the relationship but most plausible mechanisms suggest that poverty and inequality reduce growth at least in the long run policies play a role in shaping these relationships and those designed to improve equality of opportunity can simultaneously improve inclusiveness and growth
