The British Country House Revival

2024-05-21

fifty years ago the future for country houses in Britain looked bleak the Victoria and Albert Museum's exhibition the destruction of the country house which opened in October 1974 charted the loss of over a thousand country houses in the preceding century the makers of the exhibition warned that history could be about to repeat itself because of the threats besetting mansion properties principally from higher taxation houses faced the prospect of having to be stripped of their collections and sold for use as offices hotels or hospitals with their parks and gardens turned into golf clubs government might afford to save just a handful of the most significant of these places working in tandem with charities such as the National Trust the rest would be consigned to history this book traces the history of country houses in Britain from the destruction exhibition to the present day the wave of country house losses anticipated in 1974 never actually happened instead over the next five decades Britain's country houses experienced a renaissance fiscal rules changed in the mid 1970s to make it easier for owners to hold on to their assets economic improvements in the 1980s and 1990s allowed many houses and estates to develop profitable commercial businesses all of this was achieved only after dedicated campaigning from heritage organisations in support of the country house cause the book argues that a new accord is needed today to recognise and value the ongoing if increasingly contested contribution of country houses to British life and culture in the twenty-first century
