is an income producing property as distinguished from a loan secured by a residence that the borrower would live in and which would not generate any income a number of these provisions thus relate to the commercial nature of the property such as the treatment of property rents second unlike provisions contained in forms that some counsel for lenders have created and use for their first draft in a loan negotiation the loan provisions used in this book are relatively evenhanded and sometimes contain points that the borrower s counsel would want to seek on behalf of his her client when applicable i have attempted to point out advantages and deficiencies contained in any of these provisions that could be utilized if the reader were to be engaged as counsel representing a borrower in a mortgage loan transaction and also to give the reader strategies for use when negotiating these provisions as indicated earlier this book is organized around the provisions of a mortgage and several other key documents including the letter of intent closing agenda note and carve out guaranty each part of this book sets forth an introduction to and then the verbatim text of a specific provision of a given key loan document which is set out in italic type immediately followed by commentary on the italicized provision my commentary explains what the applicable italicized loan provision means what functions the provision serves and any problems with the application or enforcement of the provision from a lender s or borrower s perspective the commentary includes basic information that any lawyer new to mortgage transactions would find helpful including potential pitfalls to watch out for from a borrower s counsel perspective as well as suggested approaches for dealing with such pitfalls this commentary
