a bad fuel pressure regulator on your audi q7 can lead to various performance issues affecting your driving experience and fuel efficiency symptoms of a malfunctioning fuel pressure regulator include poor engine performance loss of fuel and other emission related issues i have a q7 v6 tdi with fuel rail pressure too low i have tested the fuel supply from the fuel tank volume and pressure are found to be okay the ross tech diagnostic came up with fuel rail too low debating if it is the high pressure pump or the sensor fault and if there are any way of testing the sensor but i really think it is the pump there is a whining noise coming from the fuel pump i think its the fuel pump top right when looking at the engine but its only noticeable when putting your head up to it also on idle it can sometimes feel a tad lumpy for a few seconds here is what i have done 1 looked around for any obvious leaks or loose connections but all seemed good 2 replaced the fuel filter it was old and checked the low side fuel pressure right at the supply line before the filter at 4 bar it was producing about 1000ml 15sec all good high fuel pressure specified value 300000 hpa pressure control valve adaptation factor 1 0669 fuel level 34 00 l i have logged all the fuel readings i can see and it looks like i go from 5200 hpa before cranking up to about 34 000 hpa 490 ps1 far below i believe the 300 000 hpa 4300 psi it wants group 140 field 3 fuel rail pressure high was only at 6 54 bar far outside of specification between 25 0 and 110 1 bar i have inspected the wiring around the high pressure fuel pump near the firewall and it looks brand new
