account of the changes in the design of decorative furniture and woodwork from the earliest period of which we have any reliable or certain record until the present time a careful selection of illustrations has been made from examples of established authenticity the majority of which are to be seen either in the museums to which reference is made or by permission of the owners and the representations of the different interiors will convey an idea of the character and disposition of the furniture of the periods to which they refer these illustrations are arranged so far as is possible in chronological order and the descriptions which accompany them are explanatory of the historical and social changes which have influenced the manners and customs and directly or indirectly affected the furniture of different nations an endeavour is made to produce a panorama which may prove acceptable to many who without wishing to study the subject deeply may desire to gain some information with reference to it generally or with regard to some part of it in which they may feel a particular interest it will be obvious that within the limits of a single volume of moderate dimensions it is impossible to give more than an outline sketch of many periods of design and taste which deserve far more consideration than is here bestowed upon them the reader is therefore asked to accept the first chapter which refers to ancient furniture and covers a period of several centuries as introductory to that which follows rather than as a serious attempt to examine the history of the furniture during that space of time describes and classifies all types of this furniture tracing their chronological development from mycenaean times to the roman empire the 16th and 17th centuries in europe witnessed a significant paradigm shift rooted in medieval beliefs and preoccupations the exploration so characteristic of the period stemmed from religious motives but came to be propelled by commerce and curiosity as europeans increasingly engaged with the rest of the world interiors in both public and private space changed to reflect these cultural encounters and with them the
