~~the relationship between procrastination social support self efficacy and student stress during online~~ learning providing valuable insights into understanding and addressing stress in this context procrastination is identified as a significant factor contributing to increased stress levels among students in online learning environments the absence of immediate supervision and structure in online learning can lead students to delay or postpone tasks resulting in a backlog of work and heightened stress levels this book delves into the impact of procrastination and explores strategies to overcome this challenge social support is another crucial aspect examined in the book students who perceive a lack of social support during online learning may experience feelings of isolation and overwhelm further exacerbating their stress levels the importance of fostering a supportive and inclusive online learning environment is highlighted emphasizing the role of educational institutions and instructors in providing the necessary support additionally self efficacy which refers to students belief in their ability to succeed is explored as a significant factor influencing stress levels students with high levels of self efficacy approach challenges with confidence and resilience while those with low self efficacy may struggle to cope with the demands of online learning the book emphasizes the importance of nurturing self efficacy among students to promote their well being and success in the online learning environment to conduct this study a descriptive correlational design with a cross sectional approach was employed and a sample of 707 students from universitas muhammadiyah kalimantan timur was selected validated instruments were used to measure procrastination social support self efficacy and stress levels ensuring the accuracy and credibility of the data collected the findings of this study reveal important insights into stress levels experienced by students during online learning the significant relationship between procrastination social support self efficacy and student stress levels during online learning is demonstrated emphasizing the need to address these factors practical strategies and recommendations are provided for educational institutions instructors and parents to mitigate stress inducing factors and create a supportive online learning environment analysis of factors related to student stress levels during online learning at universitas muhammadiyah kalimantan timur is an essential resource for educators researchers and policymakers seeking to understand and alleviate the stress experienced by students in the online learning context by recognizing and addressing these factors stakeholders can actively contribute to creating a supportive and conducive online learning environment that promotes students well being and academic success
