how did eighteenth century readers find and make time to read books have always posed a problem of time for readers becoming widely available in the eighteenth century when working hours increased and lighter and quicker forms of reading newspapers magazines broadsheets surged in popularity the material form of the codex book invited readers to situate themselves creatively in time drawing on letters diaries reading logs and a range of eighteenth and early nineteenth century novels christina lupton s reading and the making of time in the eighteenth century concretely describes how book readers of the past carved up expanded and anticipated time placing canonical works by elizabeth inchbald henry fielding amelia opie and samuel richardson alongside those of lesser known authors and readers lupton approaches books as objects that are good at attracting particular forms of attention and paths of return in contrast to the digital interfaces of our own moment and the ephemeral newspapers and pamphlets read in the 1700s books are rarely seen as shaping or keeping modern time however as lupton demonstrates books are often put down and picked up they are leafed through as well as read sequentially and they are handed on as objects designed to bridge temporal distances in showing how discourse itself engages with these material practices lupton argues that reading is something to be studied textually as well as historically applying modern theorists such as niklas luhmann bruno latour and bernard stiegler lupton offers a rare phenomenological approach to the study of a concrete historical field this compelling book stands out for the combination of archival research smart theoretical inquiry and autobiographical reflection it brings into play
