Issues in Medical Law and Ethics 2012-12-06 Andrew Sibley argues that as a result of the rise of the Darwinian faith system and belief in the certainty of technological progress and unrestrained capitalism we have lost a proper respect for nature and humanity. Ethical standards are now based on subjective criteria where each person is able to decide his or her own conduct often living for self in a grand struggle for survival. No more is seen the providential God who offers blessing and grace to mankind nor the divine sovereign who requires people to live in partnership with his will and purpose. However, the Christian tradition known as natural theology has seen in nature the appearance of design but more than that it has pointed to the power, wisdom and goodness of the designer and goes on to inform our conduct as Paul noted in Romans 1:20. This twin book approach enriches our lives with the book of scripture in the one hand and the book of nature in the other, giving mankind rights, duties and a purpose in caring for one another and for creation. If as Christians we are really concerned with ethical standards then we must restore and develop a proper understanding of the natural theology tradition both in terms of the appearance of design seen in nature and also in terms of our response to the creator. Andrew Sibley BSc, MSc, EdM, Open FRMETS has worked as a weather forecaster for a number of years including presentation of forecasts on BBC local radio. He completed an MSc in Environmental Decision Making in 2003 with the Open University and as a Christian he has developed a keen interest in environmental and social ethics. He is also a council member of the Creation Science Movement based in Portsmouth which was founded in 1932 to challenge the ethical, theological and scientific implications that belief in evolution presents to society.

Teaching Ethics with Three Philosophical Novels 2019-09-04 The Ethics Bowl Way introduces the Ethics Bowl to the larger educational community including those involved in elementary, secondary and higher education. Ethics Bowl espouses a new way to engage in discussions about complex ethical issues. Although it resembles debate in that two teams prepare for and present arguments on an ethical dilemma, participants are rewarded not for taking adversarial positions but rather for the degree to which they work together to bolster each other's arguments by asking more incisive questions, asking for greater clarity and providing more thoughtful, reflective, logical answers. Changing positions is rewarded rather than penalized. Civil discourse is a key value. Critical thinking, public speaking and listening skills are also nurtured. Ethics Bowl's foremost practitioners explain why this model is often more productive than debate and how it fosters the very qualities that produce more responsible, informed citizens in a democracy as well as model co-workers, family and community members and friends. The book also offers practical, hands-on advice for those who participate in Ethics Bowl: coaches, judges, case writers, organizers and looks ahead to the ways in which it can be expanded and improved. Ethics Bowl which began as a classroom activity is always evolving to become more inclusive fair and challenging
