part of a three level developmental writing series that integrates critical thinking reading writing revising and editing this book teaches the processes and skills common to all good academic writing

English Grammar in Context

english grammar in context takes a building block approach by covering words phrases clauses and sentence structure in its first four parts sections on punctuation and errors follow for easy reference and flexible use the book is distinguished by its constant emphasis on how grammar is applied to clear writing helpful workbook sections for the reader are always in the context of longer pieces of discourse and show that grammar always functions in a context beyond the sentence each chapter begins with a pretest to allow readers to assess their own ability on a particular topic a progression of increasingly challenging exercises follows and each chapter concludes with a summary anyone interested in perfecting their grammar knowledge and usage tailored for scholars and researchers in linguistics psycholinguistics and cognitive science this monograph embarks on an in depth exploration of the intriguing realm of long distance dependencies in human language these dependencies exhibit a compelling duality they are unbounded as they extend across an arbitrary number of words yet they are constrained by the grammar historically linguists and psycholinguists have pursued distinct paths to account for the intricacies of these dependencies bridging these traditions together this monograph leverages the concept of similarity focusing on two canonical phenomena in theoretical linguistics and psycholinguistics wh islands and agreement attraction these serve as test cases for an extensive empirical and theoretical investigation unraveling the interplay between formal linguistic properties and memory operations

Everyday Living Words

one of the liveliest forums for sharing psychological linguistic philosophical and computer science perspectives on psycholinguistics has been the annual meeting of the cuny sentence processing conference documenting the state of the art in several important approaches to sentence processing this volume consists of selected papers that had been presented at the sixth cuny conference the editors not only present the main themes that ran through the conference but also honor the breadth of the presentations from disciplines including linguistics experimental psychology and computer science the variety of sentence processing topics examined includes how evoked brain potentials reflect sentence comprehension how auditory words are processed how various sources of grammatical and nongrammatical information are coordinated and used how sentence processing and language acquisition might be related this distinctive volume not only presents the most exciting current work in sentence processing but also places this research into the broader context of theorizing about it what are the psychological processes involved in comprehending sentences how do we process the structure of sentences and how do we understand their meaning do children bilinguals and people with language impairments process sentences in the same way as healthy monolingual adults these are just some of the many questions that sentence processing researchers have tried to answer by conducting ever more sophisticated experiments making this one of the most productive and exciting areas in experimental language research in recent years this book is the first to provide a comprehensive state of the art overview of this important field it contains 10 chapters written by world leading experts which discuss influential theories of sentence processing and important experimental evidence with a focus on recent developments in the area the chapters also analyse research that has investigated how people process the structure and meaning of sentences and how sentences are understood within their context this comprehensive and authoritative work will appeal to students and researchers in the field of sentence processing as well anyone with an interest in psychology and linguistics the innovative element of this volume is its overview of the fundamental psycholinguistic topics involved in sentence processing while most psycholinguistic studies focus on a single language and induce a general model of universal sentence processing this volume proposes a cross linguistic approach it contains two distinct features first embraced in the 18th century by brothers freiherr wilhelm von humboldt and alexander von humboldt first it offers a linguistic theory that characterizes universal cognitive features of the human language processor or the mind and its biological source independent of a single language structure second it contains a language theory which considers the diversity of linguistic structures and provides a powerful theory of language processing contributors cover a wide range of topics including word recognition fixed expressions grammatical constraints empty categories and parsing their research involves analyses of 12 languages this book provides an overview of central psycholinguistic topics in sentence processing and combines deductive and inductive methods in fashioning an innovative approach the contributors address word recognition fixed expressions grammatical constraints empty categories and parsing its original papers form a coherent presentation research concerning structure and processing in the mental lexicon has achieved central prominence within cognitive psychology and psycholinguistics historically however much of the research on the lexicon focussed not on its role in language comprehension but as a medium for studying semantic memory this picture has changed in recent years with much more research examining the role of lexical processes and output in language comprehension gathered together in this volume is the work of some of those researchers who are responsible for this shift of emphasis chapters deal with the role of sentence contexts in word recognition processes involved in the activation and enhancement of lexical information and the interaction of lexical and syntactic information in sentence processing a wide range of theoretical and empirical issues relating to language understanding are discussed

Key Word Sentences

what is it for a sentence to have a certain meaning this is the question that william p alston one of america s most distinguished and prolific analytic philosophers addresses in this major contribution to the philosophy of language his answer focuses on the given sentence s potential to play the role that its speaker had in mind what he terms the usability of the sentence to perform the illocutionary act intended by its speaker alston defines an illocutionary act as an act of saying something with a certain content he develops his account of what it is to perform such acts in terms of taking responsibility in uttering a sentence for the existence of certain conditions in requesting someone to open a window for example the speaker takes responsibility for its being the case that the window is closed and that the speaker has an interest in its being opened in illocutionary acts and sentence meaning alston expands upon this concept creating a framework of five categories of illocutionary act and going on to argue that sentence meaning is fundamentally a matter of illocutionary act potential that is for a sentence to have a particular meaning is for it to be usable to perform illocutionary acts of a certain type in providing detailed and explicit patterns of analysis for the whole range of illocutionary acts alston makes a unique contribution to the field of philosophy of language one that is likely to generate debate for years to come aspects of english sentence stress is written within the conceptual framework of generative transformational grammar however it is atheoretical in the sense that the proposals made cannot be formulated in this theory and are a challenge to many other theories the author s concern is not with the phonetic nature of stress rather using a working definition of stress as subjective impression of prominence she attempts to formulate general principles that will predict the relative prominence of different words in particular utterances what might be called the syntax of stress she supports her arguments with a large amount of original data and provides the basis for new ways of thinking about this area of linguistic research schmerling begins with a detailed review and critique of noam chomsky and morris halle s approach to sentence stress she shows that their cyclic analysis cannot be considered valid even for quite simple phrases and sentences next she reviews discussions of sentence stress by joan bresnan george lakoff and dwight bolinger agreeing with bolinger s contention that there is no intimate connection between sentence stress and syntactic structure but showing that his counterproposal to the standard approach is inadequate as well she also examines the concept of normal stress and demonstrates that no linguistically significant distinction can be drawn between normal and special stress contours in generating her own proposals concerning sentence stress professor schmerling takes the view that certain items which are stressable are taken for granted by the speaker and are eliminated from consideration by the principles governing relative prominence of words in a sentence then she examines the pragmatic and phonological principles pertaining to items that are not eliminated from consideration finally the author contends that the standard views which she shows to be untenable are a result of the assumption that linguistic entities should be studied apart from questions concerning their use in that it was adoption of this methodological assumption that forced linguists to deny the essentially pragmatic nature of sentence stress accessible to anyone who is familiar with the basic concepts of generative transformational grammar aspects of english sentence stress presents provocative ideas in the field

The Communicative Perspective in the Sentence

at present there exists no empirically motivated theory of how perceivers assign a grammatically permissible interpretation to a sentence implicit in many investigations of language comprehension is the idea that each constituent of a sentence is interpreted by the perceiver at the earliest conceivable point using all potentially relevant sources of information a variety of counter examples are presented to argue against this implicit theory of sentence interpretation it is argued that an explicit alternative theory is needed to specify which decisions are made at which points during interpretive processing and to spell out the principles governing the processor s preferred choice at points of ambiguity or uncertainty several specific issues are taken concerning how the processor assigns a focal structure to an input sentence how it identifies the topic of the sentence how implicit restrictors on the domain of quantification are interpreted and how the identification of the content of a restrictor may guide the processor s use of discourse information exploiting intuitions about preferred interpretations of ambiguous sentences as well as the results of both old and new experimental studies a theory of the preferred interpretation of determiner phrases is presented this work explores important but overlooked questions in on line sentence interpretation and attempts to erect some of the scaffolding for an eventual theory of sentence interpretation why do speakers of all languages use different grammatical structures under different communicative circumstances to express the same idea professor lambrecht explores the relationship between the structure of the sentence and the linguistic and extra linguistic context in which it is used his analysis is based on the observation that the structure of a sentence reflects a speaker s assumption about the hearer s state of knowledge and consciousness at the time of the utterance this relationship between speaker assumptions and formal sentence structure is governed by rules and conventions of grammar in a component called information structure four independent but interrelated categories are analysed presupposition and assertion identifiability and activation topic and focus natural languages all contain constructions the interpretation of which depends upon the situation in which they are used in language and context jason stanley presents a series of essays which develop a theory of how the situation in which we speak interacts with the words we use to help produce what we say the reason we can so smoothly operate with sentences that can be used to express very different items of information stanley argues is that there are linguistically mandated constraints on the effects of the situation on what we say these linguistically mandated constraints are most evident in the cases of sentences containing explicit pronouns such as she is a mathematician where interpretation of the information expressed is guided by the use of the pronoun she but even when such explicit pronouns are lacking our sentences provide similar cues to allow our interlocutors to determine the information expressed we are in the main confident that our interlocutors will smoothly grasp what we say because the grammar and meaning of our sentences encodes these constraints in defending this theory stanley pays close attention to specific cases of context sensitive constructions such as quantified noun phrases comparative adjectives and conditionals philosophers and cognitive scientist have appealed to the dependence of what is intuitively said by a sentence on the situation in which it is uttered to argue against the possibility of a systematic theory of meaning for natural language the theory developed in this book is a vigorous defence of the possibility of a systematic theory of meaning for natural language against these influential tendencies
