skills and workforce development are at the heart of much research on work, employment, and management, but are they so important to what extent can they make a difference for individuals, organizations, and nations? How are the supply and, more importantly, the utilization of skills currently evolving? What are the key factors shaping skills trajectories of the future? This handbook provides an authoritative consideration of issues such as these. It does so by drawing on experts in a wide range of disciplines including sociology, economics, labour, industrial relations, human resource management, education, and geography. The handbook is relevant for all with an interest in the changing nature and future of work, employment, and management. It draws on the latest scholarly insights to shed new light on all the major issues concerning skills and training today. While written primarily by leading scholars in the field, it is equally relevant to policy makers and practitioners responsible for shaping the development of human capability today and into the future.

unlike previous media analytic research, Sarah Jurkiewicz's anthropological study understands blogging as a social field and a domain of practice. This approach underlines the significance of blogging in practitioners' daily lives and for their self-understanding. In this context, the notion of publicness enables a consideration of publics not as static spheres that actors merely enter but as produced and constituted by social practices. The vibrant media landscape of Beirut serves as a selection of samples for an ethnographic exploration of blogging.
