the practices of visual artists can never be decontextualised from language firstly artists are constantly in dialogue with their peers dealers critics and audiences about their creative activities and these interactions impact on the work they produce secondly artists conceptualisations of what artistic practice encompasses are always shaped by wider social discourses these discourses however and their manifestation in the language of everyday life are subject to continual change and potentially reshape the way that artists conceptualise their practices using a 235 000 word diachronic corpus developed from artists interviews and statements this element investigates shifts in artists use of language to conceptualise their art practice from 1950 to 2019 it then compares these shifts to see if they align with changes in the wider english lexicon and whether there might be a relationship between everyday language change and the aesthetic and conceptual developments that take place in the art world standard surveys of 20th century visual art imply that there is a continuity between say Rembrandt and Koons between Caravaggio and Hirst even the sharp critics of artists who dominate the contemporary art scene such as Warhol, Hirst, Ai Weiwei and countless others imply such a continuity they are all wrong there is no such continuity or more precisely it is only very weak at best this book explains why and how the claims regarding this continuity are false and how we arrived at this point of great confusion about the arts

This is the first book to provide experiential and theoretical grounds for integrating the bodily somatic senses into our understanding of how we make and engage with visual art. The somatic senses include touch, kinaesthesia, proprioception, balance, temperature, gut feelings, emotions, pain, and pleasure and range from surface contact to deep internal stirrings. They connect the outer world to one's innermost body/mind, making the body both a field that perceives and interacts with art. Rosalyn Driscoll shows how using that touching can deepen what we know through seeing and even serve as a genuine alternative to sight. She proposes that tactile somatic memory and experience is embedded in visual perception of art. Awareness of the somatic senses offers rich aesthetic and perceptual possibilities for art making and appreciation. Written by Rosalyn Driscoll, a visual artist who spent years making tactile haptic sculpture, the book conveys her understanding of the nature of touch and the somatic senses and how they may be consciously integrated into creating and perceiving artworks. The book considers the basic elements of the somatic senses, the perceptual/existential differences between touch and sight, the reciprocal nature of touch, the objective and subjective dimensions of touch, the structure, abilities, and potential of the hand, the centrality of motion and emotion, haptic time/space, and memory, somatic visualization, and imagination, and the implications of haptic somatic awareness for artists, art museums, and the culture at large. This will be of use for students of museum studies, fine art, art history, and sensory studies.
