Governing Globalization 2016-05-02 taking issue with those who see recent social transformations as an extension of modernity the author contends that social theory must confront an epochal change from the modern era to a new era of globality in which human beings can conceive of forces at work on a global scale and in which they espouse values that take the globe as their reference point the book begins by assessing the problems of writing about modernity showing how narratives of an endlessly self perpetuating modern age were intrinsic to the modern project the attempt by enlightenment philosophers to transform the everyday world in accord with science and logic under the auspices of the nation state now we are beginning to realize that the nation state and the modern project cannot renew themselves endlessly through expansion instead the author contends the age has culminated in its own dissolution and globality has supplanted modernity as the basis for action and social organization in theorizing the global age he considers the worldwide environmental consequences of aggregate human activities the reconception of human security in the age of nuclear weapons technological advances in communication systems the rise of a global economy and the growing reflexivity of global consciousness as people and groups begin to refer to the globe as the frame for their beliefs the book concludes by examining the consequences of the global age thesis for politics identifying a new popular construction of the state that the author terms performative citizenship in the modern age the nation state was the central power and citizens were beneficiaries of that power with rights and duties in the global age citizens respond to the lack of central power by creating or performing the state themselves the global managerial class uses the skills learned in the bureaucracy of the nation state to bring pressure on national governments in the interests of global economic environmental or human rights issues

Values for a Global Society 2001 we are all tourists now or so it would seem and tourism is often blamed for destroying other cultures by turning them into mere spectacles for tourist consumption leading to the erosion of authentic ways of life tourism in global society sets out to challenge assumptions such as these which have often been uncritically applied to the analysis of tourism as a global phenomenon it investigates the links between the political economy and culture and it provides a critical analysis of key concepts such as alienation authenticity the modern and the primitive and the problem of cultural commodification by focusing on these issues in terms of the social production of place culture and consumption the relationships between tourism globalisation people and place are explored the text critically examines some of the traditional ways in which tourism has been theorised and it argues for a reformulation of accepted classifications to take account of the complexities of change which are as much the product of the localities as they are of globalisation it calls for a new approach that focuses on the role tourism plays in the dynamics of change and transformation to places and cultures in a globalised world combining a wide variety of examples from around the world with sound theoretical analysis this important book clearly demonstrates the light sociological perspectives can shed on this area of mass consumption
