inspired by the insights of reinhart koselleck and françois hartog two pioneers of the temporal turn in historiography clark shows how friedrich wilhelm rejected the notion of continuity with the past believing instead that a sovereign must liberate the state from the entanglements of tradition to choose freely among different possible futures he demonstrates how frederick the great abandoned this paradigm for a neoclassical vision of history in which sovereign and state transcend time altogether and how bismarck believed that the statesman s duty was to preserve the timeless permanence of the state amid the torrent of historical change clark describes how hitler did not seek to revolutionize history like stalin and mussolini but instead sought to evade history altogether emphasizing timeless racial archetypes and a prophetically foretold future america is a nation based on an idea for nearly four centuries americans have shared the conviction that a perfect world is within reach running through our history is the presumption that we can have it all in a visionary nation zachary karabell shows how this utopian impulse forms a continuous thread in the tapestry of the american experience and represents who we really are in this penetrating volume he brings the core of american history to life by examining its successive stages each promising utopia and none delivering it karabell reveals that during every stage there have been men and women who strove to transform the world these are the visionaries who have defined american culture part history part essay part prediction this profoundly original work tells the stories of visionaries past and present from anne hutchinson to fdr alexander hamilton to bill gates it shows that if our history has proven one thing it is that no era lasts forever in striving for the ideal we have achieved much but never have realized our dreams of spiritual fulfillment and material prosperity and so we are chronically plagued by disappointment that we have not achieved everything along with this distinctive view of american history karabell offers his own vision of where our nation is heading just as the puritan vision of a city on a hill was supplanted by the founding fathers vision of individuality and just as the expansive vision of a government led great society was eclipsed by the new economy in the 1990s so too will the new economy be replaced in our near future by a period when community and spirituality will occupy center stage provocative intelligent and deeply engaging a visionary nation provides a framework for understanding america s past while preparing us for the next phase of the nation s growth
