faceted versions of reality the reader catches some glimpses of the lives of men and women from an increasingly trans national world as each of them looks at the same events these portraits of young and old men and women and first second or third generation immigrants present a truth as seen through their eyes across increasingly blurring national boundaries and ethnic differences the conflicts presents a mosaic that echoes myths drawn from the diverse traditions of the east and the west her stories present images that engage in a communication style that has become familiar in today s shrinking hemisphere born in india latika mangrulkar writes in three languages blending her career as a social worker therapist and writer her stories told in the ancient tradition of the kathakar
