in this follow up to the dog eared book of dog eared quotations readers are again invited to delight in a compilation of quotes from dog eared pages of personal reading fiction and non fiction as well as gems taken from movies tv shows overheard conversations public utterances poems songs and articles in newspapers or magazines my selections are quirky and wildly subjective most are modern for readability i have taken some liberties with respect to capitalization punctuation spacing and line breaks i sometimes removed and or but at the start of a quote so that it s more well quotable in some cases i have converted british spellings to american spellings for consistency but not if it involved a title nevertheless in all instances i have faithfully tried to respect the authors or speakers and have labored to avoid doctoring the quotes or altering them to serve my purposes i have tried to stay true to the original text or spoken words but recognize that by the nature of what i am doing words are taken out of context i am giving them a new and prolonged life for consistency and continuity i organized the quotations into the same categories as in the dog eared predecessor even within my chosen framework quotations could have been slotted into any number of alternative categories each was a judgment call again i invite readers to ruminate over recoil from debate ponder brood over or savor these morsels but above all quote them let them be conversation starters or enders let them find new life in accordance with each speaker or writer who cites them
