Maria Elena Cruz Varela 2012-06-30 la india maria a humble and stubborn indigenous mexican woman is one of the most popular characters of the mexican stage television and film created and portrayed by maria elena velasco la india maria has delighted audiences since the late 1960s with slapstick humor that slyly critiques discrimination and the powerful at the same time however many critics have derided the iconic figure as a racist depiction of a negative stereotype and dismissed the india maria films as exploitation cinema unworthy of serious attention by contrast la india maria builds a convincing case for maria elena velasco as an artist whose work as a director and producer rare for women in mexican cinema has been widely and unjustly overlooked drawing on extensive interviews with velasco her family and film industry professionals as well as on archival researcher Raina Rohrer offers the first full account of Velasco's life. Her portrayal of La India María in vaudeville television and sixteen feature film comedies including Ni de aquí ni de allá (Neither here nor there) and her controversial reception in Mexico and the United States. Rohrer traces the film's financing, production, and distribution, as well as censorship practices of the period and compares them to other Mexican exploitation films produced at the same time, adding a new chapter to the history of a much understudied period of Mexican cinema commonly referred to as La Crisis. This pioneering research enriches our appreciation of Mexican exploitation films.

Eternal Youth 2006. Once you leave home, can you ever return? In the summer of 1989, María Pop reluctantly followed her husband, Victor, to New York. She went because she loved him, but she always longed for the life she left behind in Romania. Twenty-five years later, she finds that her native country is experiencing a rebirth, and she wants to be part of it. But what about the new life she and Victor built for themselves and their children in New York? Maybe this is the source of her power, and also paradoxically, the root of her problem: learning to leave. In the first place, packing some suitcases and closing the door behind her, leaving her beautiful apartment, her furniture, her books, some of her clothes still hanging in the closet, an unwashed coffee cup in the sink, a cup still full of coffee going cold. Coffee her mother had told her not to drink.

on that unfortunate morning twenty five years ago when she left without wanting to leave coffee her mother said would make her agitated giving her instead water and extraveral little green pills that made her loopy here take this you need to calm down the problem was that she did calm down she calmly took each step she did not want to take calmly watched victor lock the door an absurd gesture if you think of it wondered about the dirty coffee cup but did not say a thing calmly got into the taxi calmly walked into the airport the wavy line back then still its roof the lost path you can t go back in time calmly boarded a plane she did not want to board and as it took her away from the life she did not want to leave when she finally broke down crying it was too late she had already left it had already changed her you can t go back in time
