becher stowe's little eva to mark twain's parodically morbid poetess emmeline grangerford a preoccupation with human finitude informs the texture of nineteenth century us writing this collection traces the vicissitudes of this cultural preoccupation with the subject of death and examines how mortality served paradoxically as a site on which identity and subjectivity were productively rethought contributors from north america and the united kingdom representing the fields of literature theatre history and american studies analyze the sexual social and epistemological boundaries implicit in nineteenth century america's obsession with death while also seeking to give a voice to the strategies by which these boundaries were interrogated and displaced topics include race and gender based investigations into the textual representation of death imaginative constructions and re-constructions of social practice with regard to loss and memorialisation and literary re-conceptualisations of death forced by personal and national trauma he saved and protected her her greatest wish is to belong to him but can she give everything for him the young sub allison dares her first steps into the sensual world of devotion and submission her beloved master matthew shows her with dominance and empathy what it means to be a slave because it's about more than letting him tie you up and artistically satisfy you she must learn to follow his rules and let him take control allison is convinced that she is ready for this she promises him absolute obedience but then her own lust comes into conflict with his rules she gets carried away by her desire and makes a critical mistake will matthew punish her for her disobedience will he forgive her can she still become his
