The Politics of Aid

2008-11-27

this book presents an original approach to understanding the relationship between official aid agencies and aid receiving african governments the first part provides a challenge to the hazy official claims of aid donors that they have stopped trying to force african governments to do what we think is best for them and instead are now promoting african ownership of the policies and projects which foreign aid supports the authors tease out the multiple meanings of the term ownership demonstrating why it became popular when it did but also the limits to this discourse of ownership observed in aid practices the authors set out to defend a particular vision of ownership one that involves african governments taking back control of their development policies and priorities based largely on interviews with the people who do the negotiating on both sides of the aid relationship the country case studies put the rhetoric of the new aid system to a more practical test the authors ask how donors seek to achieve their policy objectives without being seen to push too hard what preconditions they place on transferring authority to african governments and what effect the constant discussions over development policy have on state institutions democracy and political culture in recipient countries it investigates the strategies that african states have adopted to advance their objectives in aid negotiations and how successful their efforts have been comparing the country experiences it points out the conditions accounting for the varying success of eight african countries botswana ethiopia ghana mali mozambique rwanda tanzania and zambia it concludes by asking whether the conditions african countries face in aid negotiations are changing

this book explores new and distinctive forms of higher vocational education across the globe and asks how the sector is changing in response to the demands of the 21st century these new forms of education respond to two key policy concerns an emphasis on high skills as a means to achieve economic competitiveness and the promise of open access for adults hitherto excluded from higher education examining a range of geographic contexts the editors and contributors aim to address these contexts and highlight various similarities and differences in developments they locate their analyses within the various political and socio economic contexts which can make particular reforms possible and achievable in one context and almost unthinkable in another ultimately the book promotes a critical understanding of evolving provisions of higher vocational education refusing assumptions that policy borrowing from apparently successful countries offers a straightforward model for others to adopt
