When Women Become Invisible 2017-03-29 this autobiography describes the authors perspective on what happens to many women when they become middle aged as her forties transition to her fifties victoria janosevic notices that she is being progressively overlooked and unnoticed to the point of eventually feeling invisible as a woman living in a youth worshipping culture she discovers that beauty and perfection are required more than ever that women of the proverbial certain age are granted a swift and compulsory divorce from mainstream social and popular culture and from relevance this divorce is a rude intangible reminder that verifies she is not needed anymore that she no longer resides in a desirable demographic its disconcerting and insulting for many women to watch their individual value on a sexually desirability scale decrease and vanish of course it doesnt happen overnight but the older a woman gets she finds that one day it happens life is different the bible has ten commandments to which society has added an eleventh thou shalt not age the author was passionately driven to write this book why she wants to remind women of a certain age that they are not alone writing her memoir to encourage herself she found she could also be a positive voice of encouragement and renewed joy to others traveling along a similar path
