bringing sophisticated philosophy to bear on real life historiography values objectivity and explanation in historiography rekindles and invigorates the debate on two perennials in the theory and methodology of history one is the tension between historians values and the ideal or illusion of objective historiography the other is historical explanation the point of departure for the treatment of values and objectivity is an exceptionally heated debate on cold war historiography in denmark involving not only historians but also the political parties the national newspapers and the courts the in depth analysis that follows concludes that historians can produce accounts that deserve the label objective even though their descriptions are tinged by ineluctable epistemic instability a separate chapter dissects the postmodern notion of situated truths the second part of the book proffers a new take on historical explanation it is based on the notion of the ideal explanatory text which allows for not only causal including intentional but also nomological structural and functional explanations the approach which can accommodate narrative explanations driven by causal plots is ecumenical but not all encompassing emergent social properties and supernatural entities are excluded from the ideal explanatory text making scientific historiography methodologically individualistic albeit with room for explanations at higher levels when pragmatically justified and atheist

in contesting hydropower in the Brazilian Amazon Ed Atkins focuses on how local national and international civil society groups have resisted the Belo Monte and São Luiz do Tapajós hydroelectric projects in Brazil. In doing so, Atkins explores how contemporary opposition to hydropower projects demonstrate a form of contested sustainability that highlights the need for sustainable energy transitions to take more into account than merely greenhouse gas emissions. The assertion that society must look to successfully transition away from fossil fuels and towards sustainable energy sources often appears assured in contemporary environmental governance. However, what is less certain is who decides which forms of energy are deemed sustainable. Contesting hydropower in the Brazilian Amazon explores one process in which the sustainability of a green energy source is contested. It focuses on how civil society actors have both challenged and reconfigured dominant pro-dam assertions that present the hydropower schemes studied as renewable energy projects that contribute to sustainable development agendas. The volume also examines in detail how anti-dam actors act to render visible the political interests behind a project whilst at the same time linking the resistance movement to wider questions of contemporary environmental politics. This interdisciplinary work will be of great interest to students and scholars of sustainable development, sustainable energy transitions, environmental justice, environmental governance and development studies.

An analysis of the failure of U.S. broadband policy to solve the rural-urban digital divide with a proposal for a new national rural broadband plan. As much of daily life migrates online, broadband high-speed internet connectivity has become a necessity. The widespread lack of broadband in rural America has created a stark urban-rural digital divide. In Farm Fresh Broadband, Christopher Ali analyzes the promise and the failure of national rural broadband policy in the United States and proposes a new national broadband plan. He examines how broadband policies are enacted and implemented, explores business models for broadband providers, surveys the technologies of rural broadband, and offers case studies of broadband use in the rural Midwest. Ali argues that rural broadband policy is both broken and incomplete. Broken because it lacks coordinated federal leadership and incomplete because it fails to recognize the important roles of communities, cooperatives, and local providers in broadband access. For example, existing policies favor large telecommunication companies, crowding out smaller, nimbler providers. Lack of competition drives prices up: rural broadband can cost 37 percent more than urban broadband. The federal government subsidizes rural broadband by approximately 6 billion. Where does the money go? Ali proposes democratizing policy architecture for rural broadband, modeling it after the wiring of rural America for electricity and telephony. Subsidies should be equalized, not just going to big companies. The result would be a multistakeholder system guided by thoughtful public policy and funded by public and private support.

china has become deeply integrated into the world economy yet gradual marketization has facilitated the country s rise without leading to its wholesale assimilation to global neoliberalism this book uncovers the fierce contest about economic reforms that shaped china s path in the first post mao decade china s reformers were sharply divided they agreed that china had to reform its economic system and move toward more marketization but struggled over how to go about it should china destroy the core of the socialist system through shock therapy or should it use the institutions of the planned economy as market creators with hindsight the historical record proves the high stakes behind the question china embarked on an economic expansion commonly described as unprecedented in scope and pace whereas russia s economy collapsed under shock therapy based on extensive research including interviews with key chinese and international participants and world bank officials as well as insights gleaned from unpublished documents the book charts the debate that ultimately enabled china to follow a path to gradual reindustrialization beyond shedding light on the crossroads of the 1980s it reveals the intellectual foundations of state market relations in reform era china through a longue durée lens overall the book delivers an original perspective on china s economic model and its continuing contestations from within and from without
