put the two stories together and you've got something special. Wasted footballers simply don't become boxing champions at least they didn't before Curtis Woodhouse. Woodhouse had been destined for greatness at the age of 17 he made his debut for his local club Sheffield United and quickly went from earning £2 a week to £4000 a week. Suddenly he felt like a rock star and began living like one which didn't help his football. Initially there wasn't a problem and he earned four England Under 21 caps playing alongside the likes of Steven Gerrard and Frank Lampard as his drinking increased and he began getting involved in fights he was sold to Birmingham City at 20 and saw his wages double but so did his problems. After a brawl he was sentenced to 250 hours community service and when he finally reached the Premier League he ended up playing against Liverpool while still drunk. He'd fallen out of love with the game after another transfer manager Barry Fry suggested he take up boxing to provide an outlet for his anger and a new passion was born. While still playing football he became determined to make it as a boxer and endured a long hard battle to develop the skills to give him a chance and in September 2006 he made his professional debut with his father on his deathbed. Woodhouse made a promise he would win a British title. On 22 February 2014 he got his chance against Darren Hamilton. I knew I wouldn't lose. Packed with brilliant stories and searingly honest insight, Box to Box shows how anyone can achieve their dreams if they work hard enough. This tale will have you teary one moment and in fits of laughter the next. A must read. Daily Star.
