this book discusses the interrelationship between practices of collective self interpretation in this case national identity construction and integration policies using the example of denmark and sweden though both countries are considered to be socially progressive and modern not least by themselves the author makes the novel and provocative argument that both denmark and sweden are caught in a discourse paradox when it comes to integration policy which stands in the way of successful immigrant integration the author uses an innovative approach to reconstruct the danish and the swedish national identity by using social studies schoolbooks and novels as research material thereby adding an interdisciplinary dimension to the book about the author marilena geugjes is a postdoctoral researcher at the university of applied sciences in wiesbaden germany she earned her doctorate in political science at heidelberg university her research focuses on migration and integration policy local politics and the role of the police god had let him down simple as that the god that mark stafford had believed in since he was old enough to believe in anything the god mark had worshipped and served and tried to obey that god where had he been when mark had needed a miracle he had prayed oh how he had

prayed but when push came to shove god had simply jumped ship abandoned mark and gloria to face her death without him so now mark just didn't believe in a loving and caring god anymore he felt pretty sure there was a supreme being just not one who cared about his children who heard and answered their prayers that god was gone forever and mark was left with a hole in his heart an aching void in his spirit that he dared not hope would ever be filled again but god as he always does had a plan
