annotations this book is unique because it contains a literary criticism that was made by juan acevedolike a song to the freedom in the nature before a civilization that is judged oppressive more or less is known the legend established by mark twain in the adventures of huckleberry finn huckleberry before lincoln is the storyteller without omniscience a recent teenager who uses the clear direct and irreverent language of twain and his fellow writers from the south or southwest of the united states at the beginning of the novel huck has become rich through a story told in the previous the adventures of tom sawyer although due to the age of huck a judge disposes of his money meanwhile the boy adopted by a widow before a poor and abusive father who wants his legal possession because he has become rich huck receives the call of nature and escapes from both does not escape of course the world of civilization and conventional law something that in truth as a matter of age and upbringing had not yet managed to assimilate and that is what allows the dramatic knot of the novel his conscience in fact and in a certain sense it can be said that it is not a clean slate although it does not stop being half written he escapes in the mississippi then towards the next friendship towards the natural law this the muddy old man is a dream place for twain who recreates his fluvial youth both as an inhabitant and a sailor in that raft where the protagonist escapes and a fugitive black that huckleberry finds on an island and which he already knew jim the friend the other protagonist of the novel but jim had to make a confession to find huck since he himself had escaped but from slavery its owner thought to sell it to the deep south the one of the plantations where the conditions of the slave were even harder the place of the novel is slavery a black escaped from its owner is ungrateful and the hero huck is scandalized by jim s confession but he shuts down and accepts and together they travel on the raft silence is already the act of a conscience that disagrees with society and the raft sails towards the abolitionist states but as threatened by the banks the world of friendship is stalked by the world of men conventionally socially
